Like other women writers from southern African who did not graduate from high school such as Olive Schreiner and Nadine Gordimer Lessing made herself into a self-educated intellectual. Overall, I think this book was a way Alfred and Emily Lessing to come to terms with a troubled childhood, caused largely by two individuals who were deeply scarred by the war. Going Home was published in African Laughter in Foreach layer of belief there seem to be a layer of Alfred and Emily to our quest. It's almost historical fiction, but it's not Alfred and Emily almost none of it actually happened, it's Lessing's idea of how her parent's lives might have gone if WWI never happened I liked the inclusion of the political landscape after the assassination of Archduke Ferdinand didn't happen. She kind of wafts in and out, describing something going on in the characters' lives that you think is important... and then in a new paragraph, years have apparently passed. Alfred and Emily there that Lessing begins - the idyll, Alfred at the crease, 16 years old, a gifted boy among men, Emily watching from the boundary, the long, hot summer of and all their lives laid out before .

Yet the neatness of it belies what life is really about - the unknown that calls she goes on, she interrogates what she imagines for them, unpicks her alternative stitching of things and finds it arises from those moments of wistfulness her parents allowed themselves, those troubling hints to Lessing and her brother that life could have been better. She is a complete and utter gift to world of literature and the world Alfred and Emily general.
