We all know people who are less successful than they'd otherwise be because they spend their entire lives chasing enough money to live. The accommodative style is a submissive style, the yin to the competing style's yang.

Collaborating is all about value creation and is commonly encouraged by those many individuals feel as if successful negotiations are simply the product of natural skill, the key behind reaching an optimal agreement is preparation - know the issue, know yourself, and know your party. Often times, this style is employed by negotiators who do not respond well to conflict or aggression.
