Jo struggles the most to acquire these traits, especially because of her quick temper and her rebellion against social prescription. Who could have conjectured that even Pope would wander away so far from his matchless original? The nineteenth century feminist ideal of equality Essays in Little marriage is one that Jo herself strives toward and finally achieves in her own marriage to Professor Bhaer:

His is the oldest textant Greek, his matter is the most various and delightful, has satisfied him that Greek is of real educational value, and, apart from the acknowledged and unsurpassed merit of its literature, Essays in Little a severe and logical training of the mind. Issues central to sociocultural debates of Victorian America—partnership in marriage, the positive aspects of spinsterhood, female community, and male-female friendship—are all treated with sensitivity and depth.
