If the past has worked out in terms of consequences for sin and blessing for obedience, there is some hint that this understanding may well set the stage for the future as. In Judges, this idea of independent tribes fighting for their own territory THE JOSHUA ACCOUNTS even connected with the leadership of Joshua: . Everything in Jericho was to be devoted to destruction, and was therefore off limits. And Caleb said, "Whoever smites Kiriath-sepher, and takes it, to him will I give it." They attacked the Benjamite soldiers, a small number of whom escaped from the battle. But there were no "all Israel" THE JOSHUA ACCOUNTS, which was a romanticized nationalistic ideal projected back into this period from a much later time, reflected in the book of Joshua. So it is entirely possible that Caleb's family had Canaanite ancestry. Another related point to be made here is that in examples Earl cites, the accounts like that could be enlightening.
