America has never confronted a global challenge of the type or magnitude it faces today. All this must now be reversed. America will work with its partners to ensure that any borders that are changed are done so by mutual consent and self-determination, not by violence or coercion. Throughout the transition, America will have to build and strengthen capabilities. Rather, it comes from cities, states and regions, in partnership with the private sector – companies big and small, global and local – a bottom-up approach to solving problems that so many Americans seem to be craving. The great global project is no longer to stop communism, counter terrorists, or promote a superficial notion of freedom. To solve one requires solving the entire set. The Founding Fathers established a constitution that allows for the adaptation of these 10 sectors and the key is "From Burning to Building". But no one with any public pulpit has told an irresistible story of success:
